London County Hall, Pottery School

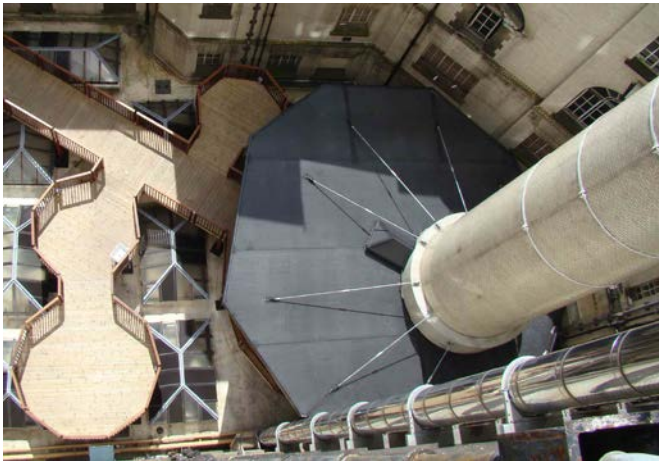

Located on the South Bank, London County Hall is not only one of the city's most iconic landmarks but is also fast becoming a key hub for entertainment, culture, the creative industries, education and sustainability in the capital.

Originally opened in 1922 as the headquarters of London County Council and County Hall is undoubtedly one of London's finest buildings. Today, it attracts over 17 million visitors each year.

The County Hall Pottery officially opened by MP Kate Hoey. the ceremony was also attended by Minister for Japan and pop legend Pete Waterman and all kept dry by a RubberBond FleeceBack EPDM flat roof.

Installed by Zebrano Interiors Ltd, who originally specialised in joinery and bespoke furniture but have expanded their company to offer many skilled tradesmen to give the whole refurbishment package; such as general builders, decorators, plumbers, roofers; all of whom have trade qualifications. They were trained and approved in 2011 in the use and application of RubberBond FleeceBack EPDM. This has allowed Zebrano to continue offering the complete building package including the roof.

The flat roof that is used to protect the pottery ovens and working space is nearly 13 metres in diameter, by using the Factory Applied Tape rolls the seaming was fast and gave a clean and uniform finish from the overlooking windows. The roof is suspended from the chimney by metal ties, each one waterproofed with RubberBond 225mm Elastoform flashing to give a completely uninterrupted working space.
